Concept note and programme

Monday 29th April 2019 (18:00-20:00)

Venue: NRW Representative Office in Berlin [Vertretung des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen in Berlin] | Hiroshimastraße 12-16, 10785 Berlin

The core idea of this event is to reflect ongoing peace operations in Afghanistan and Mali, which are both of high interest for European and German policy. Several thousand soldiers and policemen are seconded to stabilizations missions in both countries. Both missions are at a crossroads: Increasing tensions between local demands and substantive interests of the intervening countries and the policy of the governments in Afghanistan and Mali question the missions' contributions to sustainable peace in both countries. This is why this Dialogue aims to focus on the question to what extent both missions appropriately take local structures into account and which goal/end they can realistically pursue.

Experiences from Afghanistan tend into a direction that an enormous investment of resources has been wasted – with a high number of casualties in particular on the side of the civilian populations. Most recent talks between the US and the Taliban point to a possible change of strategy -- that would put the approach hitherto implemented into question. The recent experiences in Mali show that the European policy agenda (e.g. counter-terrorism, migration regulations) strongly guides the goal-settings of the mission – neglecting the local political settings in Mali. On the other hand, local initiatives such as peace brokers in Bamako deserve more attention. Efforts by the UN to hire local staff and "nationalize" their mission could adapt the international intervention better to local circumstances.

Against this background, the Dialogue discusses on the examples of Mali and Afghanistan how peace missions should consider local politics in future in order to contribute to sustainable peace. Although the disappointing results of both missions could lead to the conclusion of an 'endless peacebuilding', we would like to ask if an approach which is more sensitive to local politics would be more effective.
